THE ARMY AS A

FOOD LABORATORY.

(Army and Navy Journal.) The editor of the Physical Culture magazine is greatly surprised because when he wrote to the war department, offering to take a dozen soldiers at his own expense and prove that 'I could feed them on a diet that would be far less expensive than that which they were following, and could establish a regimen for them that would greatly increase their strength and ance and general efficiency, I received a very polite reply, declining my offer." We cannot share the wonder of the editor, the spelling of whose name very aptly suggests fads, for if these men had been lent to this diet experimenter, who can tell but what now the whole army would be parceled out among the various food theorists for purposes of tests?

Why should Mr. Fletcher, who believes that the physical evils of mankind come from improper chewing, not have been privileged to ask for a squad to give his views the proper testing? Then the Dr. Knelpp enthusinsts who assert that going barefoot in the wet grass of mornings is a sure cure for most ills flesh is helr to could very legitimately have asked for a detail to experiment with their theories. Also our friend,s the out of deor sleepers, would have been justified in demanding a trial squad, while the government food expert, Dr. Wiley, whose ideas on foods are interesting and varied. might have made his requisition. There is a large school believe that tomatoes cause cancer, and they might have sought a regiment or two to eat up several large tomato As one contemplates the possibilities of the suggestion of the editor of Physical Culture, one is impressed with the wisdom of the army authorities, who quite properly felt that the army had other duties to perform than to lend itself to every dictitian with a theory.
